French Impose Severe Plan to Brace Economy

By Axel Krause nternational Herald Tribune

PARIS - The French government, in an effort to reduce its chronic foreign trade deficit within two years and to boost confidence in the franc, announced Friday a package of 10 austerity measures, which observers and officials said were the most severe imposed on the country in 15 years.

The measures include increases in taxes and utility rates, cutbacks in government spending and severe spending restrictions for persons traveling abroad.

"We will be doing all in our power to make the program suc-ceed," Jacques Delors, the French minister of finance, economy and the budget, told reporters after the measures were approved unani-mously at a special cabinet meeting. The plan had been foresha-dowed Wednesday by President François Mitterrand in a televised speech. It followed a realignment of currencies in the European Monetary System in which the franc was devalued by 8 percent in relation to the Deutsche mark.

The austerity program, which officials said was primarily the work of Mr. Delors, has several immediate goals, but its primary aims are to cut the national budget deficit by 20 billion francs ($2.76 billion) 1983 and to generate new sav-

Under the plan, the deficit, now 3 percent of gross national prod-uct, would be held at this level this year and in 1984. The savings objective is to generate 20 billion francs for state spending, while reducing the planned increase in the nation's 1983 money supply from 10 percent to 9 percent.

Financial markets reacted favorably to the news of the measures. as the franc stayed firm Friday in foreign exchange trading, bankers

Mr. Delors, responding to newsmen's questions, said that the GNP, originally projected to expand this year by 1 percent to 1.5 percent, non will fall to between zero and 0.5-percent growth.

Government planners said that should bring France's inflation rate to around 8 percent or less this year and to 4 percent to 5 percent in 1984. In 1982, the official rate was just under 10 percent. Consumers, including foreigners resident in France, will be bearing much of the burden of the two-year effort, in the form of a 1-percent surcharge on 1982 taxable income; a 10-percent, reimbursable levy on income taxes and personal wealth; and an 8-percent increase in utility and railroad rates. The 10-percent levy would apply only to those who income taxes of more than pay income taxes 5,000 francs a year.

Strict limits will be placed on the amounts that can be spent during travel outside France. Spending by adults traveling abroad as tourists. for example, will be limited to 2.000 francs per year.

The use of credit cards by residents traveling outside France also will be limited severely, although exceptions are planned for those traveling on business. Finance Ministry officials said. Those exceptions have not been worked out. A special tax also will be imposed on imported oil to offset the recent reductions in crude oil prices; this also would maintain France's emphasis on non-oil energv sources. These and other tax measures will be phased in gradually from April through July I.

Meanwhile, government spending will be cut heavily. Part of the economy drive will include 7 billion francs for outlays by stateowned enterprises that are accumulating heavy deficits. Personal savings will be encouraged by increasing interest rates and by raising the amounts that can be saved in certain accounts. State-owned and private companies are expected to emerge as major beneficiaries of the new measures, particularly firms that export, government officials said. The revenues generated by the 19-

Summer Time | Nicaragua Is Angered By New Rebel Attacks

By Edward Cody

Washington Post Service SAN DIONISIO, Nicaragua A round of hit-and-run raids by guerrillas hiding in rocky hills here has pushed Nicaragna's Sandinist leaders to new anger over the campaign against their rule.

The attacks seem particularly worrisome because they are occurring in villages and farming hamlets of Matagalpa province, as close as 70 miles (112 kilometers) northeast of Managua, the capital.
Other attacks in a series that accelerated last summer have taken place along the mountainous bor-der with Honduras or in isolated stretches of Zelaya province that slope from the border mountains down to the Atlantic coast. The attacks appear to remain isolated and small-scale, especially in light of victory claims on the in-surgents' 15th of September Radio and the Sandinists' reports of an invasion from across the border. But several sources said the attacks were important because they were nearer to the capital and in an area less isolated than previous battlefields. "It is not so much what is happening as where," said a diplomat in Managua. "It has moved to what was always seen to be, indeed what is, the central province."

Spokesmen for the main insurgent group, the Democratic Nicaraguan Front have said in Miami that its troops have been encamped around the town of Rio Blanco, 40 miles east of here, for more than a

The Sandinist government has taken several steps demonstrating its concern. In the most prominent, Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Tinoco spelled out complaints in an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council on Wednesday. He blamed the United States and Honduras for what he called "massive infiltration" across the border. The United States and Honduras rejected the accusations. Their spokesmen have sought to portray the attacks as the outcome of discontent with the 31-year-old Sandinist revolution. The Nicaraguan defense minister, Humberto Ortega Saavedra, said this week that 1,200 rebels have invaded Nicaragua in recent weeks. Most remained in the border mountains of Jinotega and Nueva Segovia provinces, he said, but 200 had moved down into the Matagalpa region. He later raised the number of those in Matagalpa to 400 or 500.

The Defense Ministry reportedly sent a highly trained special army battalion to the area. That was a break with past practice; the 10,000 ready reserves have done most of the fighting instead of the

LONDON - The opposition Labor Party, which has suffered an almost unbroken series of setbacks in the last four years, won its most important by-election victory Thursday since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher took office in

Oswald O'Brien, the Labor candidate at Darlington, an industrial town in northeast England, overtook the candidate of the Liberal-Social Democratic alliance, Tony Cook, after trailing in the initial stages of the campai ages of the campaign. Mr. Cook finished a weak third, behind Michael Fallon, the Conservative - a blow to the alliance, which had expected to benefit from 25 percent, for Mr. Cook.

The north of England has been a stoutly pro-Labor region for dec-ades, and it has been stung by unemployment. The Labor voters in Darlington, polls indicated, flirted at first with Mr. Cook but ultimately decided to stay with their traditional affiliation.

One reason, it was suggested, was the candidates. Mr. Cook had difficulty discussing the issues, and Backing the well-oiled party machine was the second strongest chapter of West Germany's tough metalworkers union, which took an almost avuncular pride in the mammoth, fire-spewing steelworks of Thyssen, Krupp and Mannesman on the muddy Rhine.

Dr. Victor Weisskopf of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology said he believed the president's goal would be "extremely dangerous and destabilizing."

A number of other scientists and nonscientists took the same view. arguing that any success in developing anti-missile defenses would undermine deterrence of nuclear war, lead to a stepped-up arms race and eventually to pre-emptive war-fare in space to destroy the proposed defensive platforms there.

Several of the scientists also expressed the view that present "benign" military uses of space would be endangered by moves to place weapons in space. Such applications now include the use of satellites for sensor stations to warn of

Democrats Say Reagan Is Trying to Stir Fear

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Congressional Democrats have accused Přesident Ronald Reagan of using a "Star Wars scenario" to stir fear of the Soviet Union among the American people and to distract the public from what they called "the dismal failure" of the administration's economic program.

The Democrats also accused the president of "selective declassification of information for political eflect" in his release of intelligence photographs to bolster his accusations about the Soviet threat.

Delivering the Democrats' response to the president's televised address Wednesday, Senator Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii contended Thursday that "the president left the impression that the United States is at the mercy of the Soviet

Mr. Inouye pointed out that the Soviet Union now had 7,339 nuclear warheads while the United States had 9,268. He also said the president was selective in showing based in Cuba. Their presence there was no secret. The senator said he believed Mr. Reagan had suggested American strategic inferiority because "he is afraid that his excessive defense budget will be trimmed by the Congress and because he wants to take our attention off of the economic disasters brought on by his

Social Security Plan Passed, Sent to Reagan

By Spencer Rich

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Congress passed and sent to the president Friday a Social Security rescue bill that would include all new federal employees in the system beginning next year. The House vote was 243-102. The Senate vote was 58-14.

The original Senare bill had deferred the inclusion of federal employees, in response to pressure from their unions. But senators who participated in a conference to reconcile the House and Senate views yielded on Thursday to parti-cipants from the House.

The president, vice president, federal judges and members of Congress also would be brought into the Social Security system next

The most important other issue that divided participants in the House-Senate conference was how much to raise the retirement age in the next century. The House had voted to lift it gradually from 65 to 67, the Senate to 66. The participants agreed on the House provi-

The rescue bill, without which Social Security would run out of funds this summer, would also speed up scheduled tax increases, defer the cost-of-living increase in benefits, and for the first time tax half the benefits of recipients in higher income brackets. in addition, the bill would contime for six months the program of unemployment benefits for the long-term unemployed and set up a system for reimbursing hospitals under Medicare. The bill's quick progress through the two houses was an achievement that many viewed as mattainable when Congress convened in January. Then, quarrels were taking place between Republicans leaning loward benefit cuts and Democrats who favored tax increases.

But a bipartisan presidential advisory commission recommended a compromise on Jan. 15. President Ronald Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat of Massachusetts, both endorsed it.

Grain Sales to Soviet 'Damaged,' U.S. Says trade expansion, it was noted on In 9 States By John F. Burns

MOSCOW - A senior U.S. agricultural official conceded Friday that the embargo imposed on U.S. grain sales after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan had done "long-term damage to our trade" in the Soviet market. Alan T. Tracy, the acting under-secretary of agriculture, offered the assessment at a news conference that followed two days of U.S.-Soviet grain talks. His view contrasted with the more hopeful tone struck publicly by other U.S. officials who have discussed sales prospects since the embargo ended, including a delegation that came here for the semiannual talks last Sep-

"There is no question that we lost the predominant share." Mr.
Tracy said, in reference to figures showing that the United States has accounted for barely 22 percent of the market. In the years before President Jimmy Carter imposed the embargo, U.S. farmers com-monly supplied 60 percent to 70 percent of total Soviet purchases.

The six million tons of U.S. grain to which the Russians are committed this year, divided equally between wheat and corn, represent the minimum that they are resent the minimum that they are required to purchase under the U.S. Soviet grain agreement, now in its seventh year. Euromissile Substance

The debate in Washington over whether to make a new proposal on medium-range missiles before the Geneva arms negotiations recess on Tuesday is also a debate about Europe. Some think that trans-Atlantic disagreement over the deployment of medium-range missiles was, for practical purposes, ended by the election of the Christian Democrats in West Germany. All that is required now from Washington, according to this assumption, is a soothing exercise in public relations, one that merely reiterates Mr. Reagan's zero option proposal and defends it as, in Mr. Reagan's words, a seizure of "the moral high ground." After that, installation of new cruise and Pershing missiles could begin on schedule. Others, however, think that one large source of the disagreement between the United States and Western Europe — including the West German, British and Italian governments, who are to receive the missiles — is precisely Washington's pre-ference for public relations over policy reexamination. They would say that a new proposal on missile limitation which does not have true substance, which is put forward to be rejected, and which therefore is really meant to promote the deployment of missiles, will inevitably make worse trouble between Washington and European capitals — and European public opinion.

We believe West Europeans will support installation of the new missiles if they are convinced that there is no serious alternative and that it is Moscow which is the obstacle to a limitation agreement. This is not a matter to be resolved by public relations or propaganda. People have an instinct for truth, and the Soviet Union in any case is not often very subtle in these things.

If such possibilities as exist for serious compromise with Moscow are not fully and sincerely tested by the United States during the next nine months. European opinion will once again become extremely restless, and may well make it impossible for the European governments to go through with the missile deployments. The moral high ground is not so casually occupied as Washington sometimes likes to think, and this time it is truly essential to possess it, and hold it, and not just talk about it.

Reagan's Question

The president's new defense idea is pure Reagan: simple at first glance, complex at the second, running against the grain, sure to arouse a storm. It is the product of Ronald Reagan's peculiar knack for asking an obvious question, one that has moral as well as political dimensions and that the experts assumed had been answered, or found unanswerable, or found not worth asking, long ago. In this instance the question is: Why are America and the Soviets basing defense and survival on the terrible and incredible threat of mutual annihilation? Is there not a better way?

To that question a whole generation of strategists has answered no. Defending against nuclear threat has been accepted as tantamount to announcing an intent to bring an offensive threat against the other side. Deterrence - carrying with it the threat of inflicting and incurring mind-numbing damage - has come to be enshrined as the guiding strategic principle. The effort of both Americans and Soviets has been as variously interpreted. either to gain a margin of superiority or to attain parity or stability.

Deterrence has worked in the sense that nuclear war has been stayed. But the requirement to maintain a usable and invulnerable deterrent, against the rush of technology and the fear of the other side's moves, is precisely what "arms race" means. It has led, in hardware terms, to such tortured constructs as putting buge missiles on a racetrack in the western desert, running them around from one garage to the next, and occasionally opening the ceil-ing doors to let the other fellow's cameras peek in. That particular scheme was shelved, but no matter what other scheme to maintain a deterrent is finally accepted, it will keep alive the specter of mass death and destruction in a nuclear "exchange."

Against this specter Mr. Reagan now suggests that we slowly start investigating whether in the next century technology may offer a solution to security that does not rest on the prospect of mass and mutual death.

Is it a good idea? Scarcely was it out of the bottle than it was denounced as an escape from reality to the nirvana of high tech, a step toward the militarization of space, a gimmick with which to distract the freeze movement, a calculated assault on the antiballistic missile defense treaty, and, last but not least, a reckless provocation to the Soviets, who could only be expected to take the proposal as a prelude to a nuclear showdown.

Perhaps it is all these things. Perhaps, too, it is none of them. At this point it seems enough to say that President Reagan has given impetus to what is already a major gathering review of the strategic principles that America and the Soviets have adopted in the last generation. These principles, keep in mind, were not written in stone. They represent merely the best guesses made by harried men groping with the historically unprecedented circumstance — the capacity to end the world as we know it - that technology had put in their hands. Their answers created the uncertainty and peril with which Mr. Reagan, not alone, is attempting to cope now.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Does Reagan Really Want Agreement?

PARIS — Luckily, Moscow has also made some mistakes in the battle for European opinion on the missile issue. The Russians in effect joined Washington in trying to turn West Germany's recent elections into a referendum on deployment. They lost because it was primarily a bread-and-butter election, but also because they were too strident, too crude in their threats at the end.

Moscow also underestimated adamant French resistance to the idea of including French and British weapons in a deal that would have barred U.S. missiles from Europe. A diplomatic effort to split the French and West Germans boomeranged, and President François Mitterrand came out firmly for stationing American cruise missiles and Pershings in West Germany. This was a windfall for troubled Western leaders because the United States had marked up an almost unblemished record of clumsiness, poor judgment and slow wit in its missile diplomacy.

To begin, the NATO "double-track decision" of 1979 to deploy whatever could not be negoti-ated away beforehand was not perspicacious. The maximum number of 572 missiles was not a military choice but an initial bargaining stake, which undermined credibility. Then the Reagan administration waited a year before agreeing to negotiate at all, frightening Europeans with belligerent bravado. They swelled public opposition. The "zero option" finally offered, requiring removal of all Soviet me-dium-range missiles in return for no American deployment, brought only a reprieve. Washington was fooling itself, not the people who will have missiles for neighbors, if it thought they would conclude that the United States had done its best for arms control and only the Russians could be blamed for the failure. The reason pressures eased for a while was that the public was willing to wait and see whether this first, pious step was really the beginning of a process or only a mirror trick.

Some leading European experts also worried that so much noise about the "zero option" was blurring the central point: the ability of Europebased weapons to counterbalance (not to destroy) Soviet weapons targeted on Europe once Eastern air defenses make it unlikely that Europe-based planes can get through to Soviet targets. This is a need that would still be felt even if there were no SS-20s, in order to prevent a rent in America's nuclear umbrella over Europe.

The first glimmer of a breakthrough in the Geneva talks came last summer when U.S. negotiator Paul Nitze and the Soviet's Yuli Kvitsinsky went for their walk in the woods. It simply is not known in the West whether Mr. Kvitsinsky spoke for himself without Moscow's knowledge. If so, it was very rare andacity from a disciplined veteran Soviet negotiator.

Their tentative understanding included important concessions of principle from Moscow. instead, Washington hesitated when the story leaked and then repudiated Mr. Nitze. Moscow then also publicly rejected the idea.

European diplomats were appalled. Political alertness would have brought Washington to state immediately that Mr. Nitze's initiative proved it was indeed trying to negotiate behind the scenes. If the Russians weren't interested. they would have had to make their own excuses. Eugene Rostow was fired as head of the Arms Control Agency in the aftermath, and a replacement was nominated who is so unlikely that the Republican-led Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted no confidence.

Mr. Nitze remained to talk to the Russians, his wings publicly clipped. Now, his Geneva partner Edward Rowny, who heads the strategic missile talks, has shown his special ineptitude at diplomacy by firing off a memo lambasting his own team and trying to shut out two Democratic congressmen. But his reward has been a renewed show of White House support.

If the Soviet Union had written the scenario to show up the United States as a reluctant bum-bler in the gravest problem of our time, it could scarcely have done better.

With all this as background, Washington is at last going to make a new proposal for limited Euromissile deployment. Whether it comes be-fore the talks recess on Tuesday or later, it will visibly be because of European pressure and thus still not a fully convincing sign that America really wants agreement.

At this late stage, something more is needed to show that the United States is serious about arms control. Mr. Nitze is a professional with long experience in the field. He is a hawk who opposed SALT-2, but he is widely respected as an earnest negotiator.

There was never much prospect that the Euromissile talks would get far except in the frame-work of negotiations on strategic missiles. Putting Mr. Nitze in charge of both delegations and instructing him to find out whether the Russians can in fact be budged would drastically change the bad atmosphere. If the answer is still nyet, then everybody would know who said it.

About the Sovietophobia Threat and Its Cure

PRINCETON, New Jersey — The United States has two Soviet problems. One is the real but manageable Soviet threat to American national security and international interests. The second and more serious problem is Sovietophobia, or exaggerated fear of the threat.

An old American political disease. Sovietophobia endangers democratic values, distorts budgetary priorities and threatens natio enhancing the prospect of nuclear war. Its symptoms include militarized thinking about U.S.-Soviet relations, alarmist assertions about Soviet intentions and capabilities, and baseless claims that the United States is imperiled by strategic "gaps."

After a brief remission in the 1960s and early 1970s, Sovietophobia has re-emerged in a form more dangerous than the Cold War epidemic. It is the little discussed political factor behind the Reagan administration's shift from nuclear deterrence to a "nuclear war fighting" strategy and its extravagant defense budget. Public debate has focused myopically on the finan-cial and technological merits of these radical military proposals, while the real issue should be the ominous change in their political purpose. All evidence indicates that the Reagan administration has abandoned both containment and détente, the political goals that had shaped American strategic doctrine since the 1940s, for the very different purpose of destroying the Soviet Union as a world power. Thus the administration's persistent talk about "destabilizing" and "prevailing over" the "evil empire," and its apparent unwillingness to negotiate a strategic arms agreement. It means a rejection of nuclear parity for a renewed and impossible quest for superiority, which is a potentially fatal form of Sovietophobia. The cure for Sovietophobia is to recognize it as a pathological rather than healthy response to the Soviet Union. Although the Soviet system is highly repressive at home and a dangerous adversary abroad, not even its most alarming behavior explains extreme American reactions.

The present wave of Sovietophobia began in the 1970s with claims that the U.S.S.R. had perfidiously "killed" détente by building up its military forces and invading Afghanistan. But that military buildup had been long expected, since it fulfilled the long-standing and loudly pro-claimed Soviet goal of strategic pari-ty with the United States. And the invasion of Alghanistan in December 1979, while indefensible, came well after détente was already in a deep political crisis that was equally of American making.

Clearly there is a major discrepancy between American perceptions and Soviet realities. In the 1950s we exaggerated Soviet economic strength; now, we underestimate it.
Misperceptions become especially dangerous when linked to interpreta-tions of Soviet foreign policy. Against all political and military log-ic, the Carter administration inter-preted the invasion of Alghanistan as a march toward the Gulf, on the er-roneous premise that Moscow would soon need foreign oil. That extreme Soviet Union leads logically to nuclescenario is forgotten but its consequences live on in ominously revised doctrines, a huge military budget and abandonment of SALT-2.

What causes such extreme misperceptions of the Soviet Union? Explanations that point to American anticommunism or lack of knowledge are inadequate. Those factors have not and calmer policies toward China or several other communist countries.

The real source of Sovietophobic perceptions is more fundamental: The United States, unlike most nations, still has not fully admitted that the Soviet Union, whether we like it or not, has become a legitimate great

Time Both Sides' Men Went Visiting

WASHINGTON — How would Wyou explain this to a visiting Martian? The Soviet Union is the overriding consideration in all the great issues of national security that face the United States. The Soviet Union has been open to foreign travel since 1956. The overwhelming majority of American political leaders, particularly members of Congress, have never visited the Soviet Union.

Only about 20 percent of the Soviet Politburo, and a smaller fraction of the Communist Party's Central Committee, have ever seen America. During the last quarter of a century each superpower has spent be-tween $5 trillion and $10 trillion on defense, most of it to prepare for war against the other — approximately $30,000 for every citizen of both countries. You would think they might have spent a little of this money on travel, if only to get a firsthand impression of the "enemy" that justifies all this spending and weaponry. This failure to even see, let alone know, the adversary has bothered some of us for a long time. As long ago as 1970 the Senate passed a bill intended to encourage more visits in both directions, but the Nixon administration killed the legislation. Perhaps on both sides the highest leadership looks with some hesitation on increased involvement in foreign affairs of their colleagues, political peers and subordinates. Knowledge can be a complicating thing.

There are other obstacles to travel to the Soviet Union. It isn't easy to arrange, and there is no organization to help out — the way, for instance, the National Committee on U.S.-China Relations would help organize a trip to or from the People's Republic. For Americans, I am convinced the net effect of travel to the Soviet Union can be summarized thus: "Trust them less, fear them less,"

For hundreds of years Western intellectuals have been disillusioned by the intellectual suffocation of Russian life. Western obvservers feel themselves, as one U.S. ambassador put it, "in a profoundly different and strange civilization." This is what produced that famous Indeed America has, and the Russians well remember the Aliced Expeditionary Force in 1917. erybody knows beforehand, once and for all, that on any and every subject there can be only one opinion."

In 1948 a Soviet official told John

Steinbeck: "We are very tired of peo-ple who come here and are violently pro-Russian, and who go back to the United States and become violently anti-Russian. We have had considerable experience with that kind." On the other hand, the Russians fear of war, and the weaknesses of Soviet society, have tended to tranquilize those visitors most alarmed about Russian aggressiveness. Few visitors return from Russia thinking them "10 feet tall" or capable of superbly timed feats of technological attack. Russia is not Japan. It is obvious when you are there, but U.S. leaders seem unable to realize it. And there is much in the craw of least likely to investigate it. The situation may be comparable on the Soviet side. Probably the people most concerned about the American threat do not come to the United States. Probably also those who do come go home "trusting us more and fearing us more." America is more open than Russians can imagine, and much more powerful and richer.

Tentative results show a 17percent decline in well-being for the median member of this group.

In 1972 the median disposable income for this group was $8,099. By 1982 this figure had jumped to $17,709 — before adjustments for changes in economic prospects and for inflation, it is instructive to work through the principal adjustments that must be made.

The core unemployment rate is widely held to have doubled, from 4.5 percent in 1972 to 9 percent. The "risk premium" that must be netted out from 1982 disposable income to worker, our calculations show.

There is a $1,250 annualized adjustment per worker to cover the growth in unfunded federal liabilities for old age and medical insurance. This can be perceived as a surtax that should be levied today to put Social Security and Medicare on a sound footing until the year 2050. My firm's dollar figure here rests upon conservative assumptions about the future performance of the economy.

• There is the widely discussed acceleration in the depreciation of physical capital (highways and bridges, for example) and human capital (pedagogical competence in mathematics and science). Annual charges of $225 and $150 were estimated for increased physical and human capital depreciation respectively.

• The growth in unfunded credit obligations incurred primarily by federal financing agencies implies an adjustment of $45 per worker.

The Federation of American Sci-When these various charges are deducted from the 1982 median disposable income of $17,709, the result is $15,379. But the is more to do: We must account for inflation. do: We must account the initiation. The Consumer Price Indix shows that the inflation tax during the decade is $8,674. Netting this old leaves the median worker with $6,155, in 1972 dollars. This is a 17-perc a decrease from the 1972 median in the of $8,099 that we started with. of $8,099 that we started with

This analysis is merely a start, we hope it points in the direction of more useful and honest approach assessing changes in economic well-being. Mortgages on the future should show in the books.

Sectarian Riots in Karachi Reveal Strain of Pakistan's Islamization

By William Claiborne

KARACHI, Pakistan — President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq's campaign of Islamization, which was intended to unify Pakistan, is showing signs of having the oppo-

Sectarian rioting between the majority Suani Moslems and the minority Shiite sect continued this week despite a severe curfew that was imposed in northern Karachi after disturbances that left at least seven persons dead.

Meanwhile, clashes continued sporadically at universities here and in Lahore between rightist fundamentalist students and Moslem moderates. At Karachi University, which has been closed, members of the fundamentalist Islami Jamiat Tulaba organization were dispersed with tear gas March 13 after they seized an administration. building and seized two city buses to barricade streets.

The militants have been de-manding the release of one of their leaders who was arrested last year on charges of murdering a student leader of an opposition group.

The sectarian clashes have prompted demands for a debate in General Zia's handpicked Consultative Assembly, with some members claiming that the riots have been inspired by forces opposed to the martial-law government and with the opposition blaming the

The northern Karachi riots were sparked by a dispute over the con-struction of a Shiite imambara, or shrine, in a Sunni neighborhood on land that the Sunnis claimed had been allotted to them for a mosque. Several attempts reportedly were made to set fire to the shrine, and an estimated 5,000 Shiite demonstrators staged a sit-in on a main thoroughfare.

The government claimed to have resolved the dispute by paying the Shiites compensation and agreeing to use the plot for a neighborhood dispensary. Shiites comprise about 15 percent of the population.

But the announcement of a compromise enraged working-class Sunnis, and rioting erupted. While the government estimated casual-ties at 7 killed and 72 injured, unofficial sources said 20 to 30 per-sons had been killed, most of them in exchanges of gunfire between introduction of a system of interest-free banking, and the creation of sharia, or Koranic courts. The Shiites' resentment toward the majority sect has been fueled by the success of religious zealots, most of them Sunni, in filling a vacuum created by the absence of democratic institutions and imposing their brand of Islam on the country's 60 or so minority sects, according to some Pakistani political analysis. A.T. Chaudhri, former editor of the Islamabad daily The Muslim. observed that the emergence of the new fundamentalist religious leadership is paving the way for a surge of sectarian conflicts in Pakistan.

A Western diplomat noted that since the sectarian violence flared, General Zia had stopped talking about the possibility of resuming constitutional democracy in the next year or so.

The sectarian troubles demonstrate how difficult it is to use Islamization as a unifying force," he said. "On the contrary, it has been divisive." Moreover, the diplomat added, the polarization in Pakistan has been compounded by a growing resentment among Baluchis, Sinds and Pathans in the western regions over the Punjabicontrolled government in Islama-

Sculptors Showing In Paris Galleries

By Michael Gibson

ional Herald Tribune DARIS - Jean Clareboudt is one of the most interesting makers of monumental environments active in Europe. His current show is devoted to smaller works and the sketches which surround them. Clareboudt might be characterized as something of a nature mystic. This comes across, rather fuzzily, in his writings, and much more obviously in his work, which makes use of notions that carry symbolic and outrightly mystical connotations such as "circle," "square," "limit," "break" and so forth. The pieces lie nearly flat on the ground and present, for example, a plate iron circle resting on a grid of iron beams and combined, in one way or another with a large unhewn stone. I do not find all the pieces persuasive — in some cases I get the feeling that the artist has let himself be taken with the idea of a circle (or a broken circle), which lies on the floor minimal and almost negligible. But the successful pieces belong in a place that re-mains to be invented: a Western equivalent to the Zen garden. Jean Clareboudt, Farideh Cadot Gallery, 77 Rue des Archives, Paris

Ulrich Rückriem, born in Düsseldorf in 1938, has in common with Clareboudt in that he also uses the "natural" aspect of rough stone. The catalog of his show tentatively places him "between mini-mal and process art." Rückriem will take a massive block of stone and cut it up into several pieces.

The works are very sensitive to environment: Placed in a forest they can have the mysterious appropriateness of a prehistoric monument, while set on a plot of grass between a hedge and a parking lot, they appear to lose their aura. The pieces presented here have an imposing and elemental quality that the neutral territory of the museum enhances.

The paradox of this sort of work is that it starts out as a deadpan avant-garde exercise m tantology and winds up loaded with symbolic connotations. Rückriem says this used to bother him, but now, realizing that geometric forms will always have symbolic value, he doesn't worry about it anymore. national Herald Tribune DARIS - The art market hardly ever follows I the rules that prevail in other fields of the economy. But it is in times of crisis that the discrepancy is revealed to the full.

To an economist, the sale of paintings by 19th- and 20th-century masters conducted at Drouot March 19 by the auctioneer Jean-Louis Picard would make little sense. One moment, a minor artist would go through the roof, while seconds later works carrying famous signatures would sell almost cheaply.

Right at the beginning, a delightful watercol-or sketch of the Quai Voltaire in Paris, done by Henry Harpignies in 1878, quadrupled its estimate as it went up to 28,000 francs (about $3,850). This is a huge figure for a drawing barely larger than a picture postcard — 13.5 by 21.5 centimeters — and by a painter of the Bar-

It might perhaps have been justified for a watercolor of his early period, that is from his pre-Impressionist days, when the Barbizon school and its parallel development in Honfleur represented the most modern trends in French painting, from which the Impressionists were to bor-row extensively. But by 1878 the situation of the Barbizon and Honfleur movements on the one hand and Impressionism on the other had been reversed. Exquisite as it may be, the Quai Voltaire sketch is a hangover from an earlier period. Commercially speaking, this is a shortcom-

Conversely, 10 minutes later, there came up a sketch by Johan Barthold Jongkind illustrating the most advanced trend of its time. The watercolor heightened with gouache represents a riv-erside view somewhere in Holland. It must have been done around 1871-72, when the painters, who were not yet known as Impressionists the name was coined by a critic after Monet's famous "Impression de Soleil Levant" of November 1872 - were breaking loose from Barbizon, Honfleur and the rest. It is quickly jotted in strokes of light colors that were to remain the hallmark of Impressionism and has a vibration 17.000 francs it was a brilliant buy, defuly snapped up by a Paris dealer.

and settled down to a succession of high prices francs would have seemed a more likely figure for a short while. An unimportant watercolor by Henri-Edmond Cross was dearly paid at 25,000 francs. Some futile watercolors by Raoul Dufy this sale is no exception. One might argue for were particularly well received by private French buyers — "A Southern Mansion in a Park" soaring to 90,000 francs. So when, two lots later, a first-class crayon sketch of a woman in the nude by Suzanne Valadon came up, everyone thought it would sell very well. Unaccountably, bidding stopped at 8,000 francs, making it a bargain. Still more of a bargain was a remarkable watercolor done as a project for a lampshade by Maurice Denis bizon school who has never been rated a key in 1894. Called "Au point du Nord un bai était domé" (A ball was being given on the northern bridge), the watercolor is halfway between Sym-bolism and the Expressionism of Toulouse-Lautrec. A Paris dealer bagged it for 36,000 francs.

THE ART MARKET

Then came the best buy of the sale, a rare gouache, virtually abstract despite its title, "Interior Scene." Signed by the Russian-born artist Jean Pougny, it was probably done just before World War I. No one took any notice of the composition in highly contrasted colors, which is the control down at a hundrable 6 500 frames. was knocked down at a laughable 6,500 francs. By then the auctioneer must have been worrying a bit. But there were some nice surprises in store for him. The most striking of all was a brouze, "Panthers," by Rembraudt Bugatti, the early 20th-century animalier sculptor. It zoomed to 202,000 francs, three times the estimate. Oil paintings sold just as paradoxically as the

It is always possible to submit a seen rational explanation when the event is over, and this sale is no exception. One might argue for example that middle-class Frenchmen with no. may be coming bought cautiously hence the low prices for the better pieces.

But that cannot explain the whole sale par-tern, if only because foreign professionals, particularly Americans, who are back in the market, should have made up for the seticence of their Parisian colleagues. Moreover, contrasts continued this week

Tuesday, Raymond de Nicolay, selling Of Master drawings and paintings; established at all-time high when he knocked down a portra in crayon on brown paper done by Ingres 1817 at 1.52 million francs to an unidentifie buyer. The drawing is wonderful, but not in buyer. The drawing is wonderful, but not in pristine condition—tears at the bottom, some rubbing, a strip added on the right. It is also tiny, 28 by 22.5 centimeters. Almost as surprising was Jacques-Louis David's preparatory sketch, dated 1786, for the painting now in the Louvre, "The Courtship of Paris and Hiden," completed in 1788. The study in peu and wish 18 by 22 centimeters, went up to 390,000 frames, another record price paid by a Paris dealer, went the condition of the paid by a Paris dealer. another record price paid by a Paris dealer, presumably on behalf of some museum or major foundation. Huge Doré Oil Reappears in Vienna

By Alan Levy

JIENNA - Gustave Doré, who died in Paris 100 years ago, is remembered today as the imagina-tive illustrator of the works of Balac, Cervantes, Dante, Milton, Rabelais and La Fontaine. But in his time, he was lauded as a painter, too. "He took pains with the pen in order to be independent with the paintbrush," was one contempo-rary comment. His greatest oil, "Christ Leaving the Praetorium," a massive canvas that drew crowds when it was first exhibited, has been brought back to life from a dusty warehouse and put on display in Vienna.

This resurrection was the work George Encil, a Viennese-born for western Canada. Settling in Banff ("The first time I saw the Rockies, I stopped missing the Alps," he recalls), he became an entrepreneur in the ski industry and began to indulge his passion for collecting art. Among his acquisitions is an early Picasso landscape, painted in an Impressionist style when the artist was 16, now on loan to the Vienna Kunsthistor-

"I bought it cheap in 1958," Encil says, "because nobody wanted a nonconformist Picasso then, but I didn't buy it because it was a bargain. I bought it because I liked it.

In the mid-1960s, the New York dealer Oscar Klein showed Encil photographs of some new acquisitions, several Gustave Dorés that had been lying around London in disrepair and neglect. Encil was intrigued by a colossal oil, 20 feet high and 30 feet wide, "Christ Leaving the Praetorium."

Restoring the painting took about 15 years. In 1980, Klein, then in his late 80s, sold it to Encil for a five-figure price that Encil least, a sound-and-light show. Will Economic Summit Tackle The Key Issues? Probably Not

TEW YORK — Economic conferences among the leaders of the major construes of the industrialized world, like the one to be held by President Ronald Reagen at Williamsburg. Virginia, in late May, inevitably separate public expectations that something is about to be done to deal with the world's economic problems. Otherwise, why hold them?

The White House has someth to forestall public expectations for the hour separate by saying there would be no formal agenda and no committee when the conference ended.

But the United States has in fact set an agenda, it reflects the monetarist heacitly interest. James has in fact set an agenda, it reflects the monetarist heacitly interest. James has in fact set an agenda, it reflects the monetarist heacitly interest. James has in fact set an agenda, it reflects the monetarist heacitly interest and washington. Beryl Sprinkel, undersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs; W. Allen Wallis, undersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs; W. Allen Wallis, undersecretary of the forest conomic affairs; and Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist of the Office of Management and Budget. They have worked out an agenda with three topics for the three-day mentions.

It is time to cut our

the approach that was successful in the

Bretton Woods.

Day 1: A review of economic conditions in the industrial world. This is unlikely to lead to any plan in coordinated action for lifting the industrial countries out of the disap but only to establishing a base of national economies.

Day 3: A delaste about East-West trade. Mr. Reagan is eager to press for measures to restrict Soviet access to Western technology and equipment, to hamper the Soviet economy and reduce its military capabilities.

The European participants, including Prime Minister Margaret Thathler of Britain, will still be smarting from the president's effort after the Versalles summit meeting to upset contracts to help build the Soviet samuel gaz pipeline. Mr. Reagan backed down when George P. Shultz appaced Alexander M. Haig Jr. as secretary of state, but the conflict is

Room for Doubt

Will the Williamsburg conference really tackle the most crucial issues operconting the world economy or propose anything to solve them? There is room for much doubt on that score.
Frofessor Robert Mundell of Columbia University, a leading internanonal economist whom Professor Peter B. Kenen of Princeton has called the finest mind in our profession" (while not always agreeing with him), metends that five key economic problems of the major industrial coungues should be on the agenda at Williamsburg. (1) the international shorp, with its high unemployment; (2) the instability of internationally resied commodities; (3) stagnation, in six of the seven countries, with only lapsen growing at a reasonably good rate; (4) high real interest rates; and (5) the world debt crisis.

He maintains that all are interrelated and have major political and unional security ramifications for the Western alliance and the rest of the world. The connection among them, as he sees it, is the disordered unit amonetary system. The experiment with floating exchange rates and monetary system, the experiment with floating exchange rates and monetarism, he says, has been a failure. While the Federal Reserve has absoluted, at least for the time being, money supply growth railes, in caller to rescue the U.S. economy from a despining recession and high metapologuess. Mr. Mandell believes it will go back to monetarism. Rosiving the experienced with a new set of monetary rules, he holds, will only said once more in defeat.

it is probable that several European leaders who artend the Williams-burg talks would welcome such an approach. The U.S. Treasury secre-tury, Donald T. Regan, declared his macrest in a new "Bretton Woods" memory conference, but his Treasury associates promptly talked him out of a — or at least into allence on the issue. President Reagan has into the his sympathetic to the idea. The subject of a "new Bretton Woods" is not dead.

Prices Off Modestly On NYSE

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed off Friday, retreating from the record high reached on Thursday. The Dow Jones average of 30 in-dustrials, which rose 5.03 Thursday to surpass its previous peak on March 7, dropped back 5.81 to 1,140.09. Losers held a 4-3 lead over gainers, while volume was 76

Analysts said many investors had grown increasingly concerned about interest rate prospects. Rates have turned higher this month with Federal Reserve data showing onetary growth exceeding the Analysts said investors moved away from the market late in the ahead of the weekly moneysupply report, issued after the close.

Henry Kaufman, the chief econ-omist of Salomon Brothers, Friday said that the federal funds rate is likely to rise to 9 or 91/2 percent in the next month or so.

Mr. Kaufman said this would put upward pressure on a variety of other interest rates, including banks' prime rates, and thus risk undermining the present economic recovery. Federal funds, overnight loans between banks, were trading at 8% percent Friday.

Philip Braverman, an economist for Chase Manhattan, however, believes that "despite the near-term prospect of higher rates, this is almost certainly not the beginning of a progressive Fed firming." The Chase economist said a lower-than-expected inflation rate and the Fed's concern over the "stillfragile" economic recovery, international financial distress and high real interest rates "argue that the downtrend in interest rates should eventually be reestablished."

The market's latest rally, which the Dow shot up 17.90 Wednesday, has been two-pronged, analysis said. Institutional investors were shopping for blue-chip stocks to enhance their portfolios for the end of the quarter, they said. At the same time smaller investors showed an increased interest in low-priced, speculative is-

Citicorp's System Bypasses AT&T

By Robert A. Bennett New York Times Service

NEW YORK - On April 1, a clerk in a Long Island, New York, office of Citicorp will make history by picking up the phone and dialing a Citicoro office in California.

It will be the first time that a financial company will have used its own satellite communications system to connect its offices across the country, bypassing such common carriers as American Telephone & Telegraph

The moment will mark Citicorp's way of challenging the communications companies, which the bank said have been raising its domestic communications bills 20 percent a year. While Citicorp is taking its own approach, other financial-services companies, which have similar probability of the companies of the co lems, are not sure that it is the best. Some contend that in the long run, as competitive forces depress prices, it would be cheaper and more efficient to work with the common carriers.

Citicorp paid $80 million last year to transmit and receive information in the United States, according to Stephen M. Piraino, a vice president who specializes in satellite communications. If these costs were to keep nising at 20 percent a year, they would double in five years and again in 10 years, to $320 million by 1990, more than Citicorp's $293 million in t operating earnings from its business in North America in 1982.

Citicorp is determined not to let that happen and has spent tens of millions of dollars to control its communications destiny. Last year, it paid almost $24 million to become the first financial company to buy transponders on a satellite. Transponders are electronic devices that receive and transmit signals. But the full cost of the hardware was substantially greater because, to make the transponders usable, Citicorp also bought 10 earth stations, for almost $1 million each.

In addition, the revisions would remove "most, if not all" foreign complaints about other nondiscriminatory but cumbersome Japanese procedures, he added.

The proposed revisions - which President Ronald Reagan singled out Jan. 19 as the most important steps that Japan could take to ease trade frictions with the United States — would be submitted to parliament, hopefully for approval in the current session, due to end May 26, said Masaharu Gotoda, the cabinet secretary.

Other revisions that can be carried out administratively would be implemented immediately, the Forcign Ministry official said.

It was the first time that Japan has attemped to answer foreign criticism of its procedural barriers to imports by revising its entire standards, testing and certification procedures, rather than by dealing with complaints involving only specific products.

The changes and the U.S. and European reaction to them promise to mark a turning point in Japan's relations with the United States and the European Community. Not only does the package ad-dress itself to what the Foreign Ministry official called the last major area of official Japanese barriers to imports unaffected by earlier liberalization programs. The revisions were promised in a Jan. 13 government announcement.

On Jan. 19, summing up two days of talks in Washington with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Mr. Reagan declared that "nothing would better prove to the American people the good intentions of our Japanese trading partners than tangible progress in revis-ing Japanese certification laws and steel companies, according to a commission statement.

EC Contests Ruling That Imports Of Steel Are Hurting U.S. Makers

BRUSSELS (AP) — The European Community Commission Friday contested a U.S. ruling that imports of special steel products are harming domestic producers. World recession, not EC imports, are to blame for the woes of U.S.

The U.S. International Trade Commission ruled Thursday that $373 million worth of stainless- and alloy-steel imports, principally from eight countries, injured the domestic industry. The ruling could result in import quotas or tariffs imposed by the Reagan administration.

Japan Warns U.S. Over Toyota

TOKYO (Reuters) - Shintaro Abe, the Japanese foreign minister. threatened Friday to take unspecified retaliatory action against the United States for attempts by the U.S. Justice Department to learn the production costs and sales prices of Toyota vehicles for taxation purposes.

The Justice Department last February filed a suit against Toyota, accusing a subsidiary. Toyota Motor Sales USA, of failing to produce most sales and cost data requested by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. Mr. Abe said that for the United States to apply domestic laws beyond its territory violates international law.

Exxon Loses $895-Million Case

WASHINGTON — A federal judge ruled Friday that Exxon overcharged the public $895.5 million for crude oil produced from a Texas field. The udge ordered the company to pay back the money through state-run energy conservation programs.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Flannery ordered the money put into an escrow account in the U.S. Treasury, which will distribute it to the govern-ments of all 50 states. "Each state must then use the funds under one or more of five existing federal energy conservation programs," the ruling said. The programs finance home weatherization for low-income and elderly people; assist such people in paying energy bills; help states devise energy conservation programs: reduce energy consumption in schools and hospitals; and promote conservation by small busines The broad scattering of the ill effects of Exxon's wrongdoing renders impossible the tracing of the overcharges to their ultimate victims and the calculation of the precise damages suffered by each, Judge Flannery said.

The distribution will be carried out under a formula devised by Congress, based on a state's petroleum product consumption from 1973 through 1981. The formula has been used for distribution of overcharges from out-of-court settlements.

The crude oil came from Exxon's Hawkins Field. Exxon had contended that government price regulations did not apply to its production

The U.S. Energy Department had charged that Exxon overcharged its crude oil customers by failing to establish a unit-wide base production control level for the Hawkins output.

The company was also charged with selling as higher-priced "new oil" what should have been sold as lower-priced "old oil" under federal price controls which were lifted by President Ronald Reagan in January 1981.

Exxon officials had no immediate comment on

Judge Flannery rejected the U.S. Energy Department's petition to assess $38 million in civil penalties against the company in addition to ordering the refund. He said the department had not proved that Exxon "gerrymandered production at the Hawkins Field in an attempt knowingly to circumvent price controls."

THE DARK SIDE OF GENTUS The Life of Alfred Hitchcock.

BROWSING aimlessly through Donald Spoto's "The Dark Side of Gemus," a study of the career of the filmmaker Alfred Hitchcock by the author of the earlier "The Art of Alfred Hitchcock," a reader quickly discovers the famil-iar. There is Hitchcock's claim that when he was a boy his father, as a punishment, had him locked up in prison for five minutes, thus contributing to Hitchcock's lifelong

There is the obligatory dissection of the famous shower-stabbing scene in "Psycho." And there is the predictable description of the ex-traordinary special-effects work that went into the filming of "The Birds." So it looks at first glance as if Spoto, despite his unusual qualification of possessing a Ph.D. in theological literature from Fordham University, has produced a chronological account of Hitch-cock's career that adds little to John Russell Taylor's "Hitch: The Life and Times of Alfred Hitch-cock (1978), which in turn did not advance significantly beyond François Truffaut's book-length interview called simply "Hitchcock" (1967). But what is this that Spoto is further revealing? Hitchcock not only subjected Tippi Hedren to nearly sadistic torture while shooting the climactic attack in "The Birds," but late in the filming of "Marnie" "made an overt sexual proposition" to Hedren and proceeded to back it up with professional

What Donald Spoto has produced here is indeed yet another chronological treatment of Hitch-cock's life and cinematography, complete with the familiar mile-to-challenge Spoto's conclusion stones of the master's entry into filmmaking by way of title-card designing, his move to the United States in 1939, and his struggle with David O. Selznick for autonomous independence. But "The Dark Side of Genius" digs deeper than any previous book-length study of Hitchcock.

Although such details may seem at times like mere erudition on Spoto's part, they have the cumula-tive effect of illuminating much a conclusion it is difficult to argue. about Hitchcock's art that we may have previously taken for granted.

Then there is much new information concerning Hitchcock's relationships with the co-workers on Times. his films - his compulsion to control and dominate such cool, blonde actresses as Madeleine Carroll, Grace Kelly, Vera Miles, Kim. Novak and Eva Marie Saint, which pattern eventually bore strange fruit in Hitchcock's self-destructive outburst with Tippi Hedren during the filming of "Marnie." additional perspective on the complexity of his suffering.

Finally, there is the portrait that emerges of an individual struggling tragically, and marderously, with his dependence on women, if one may reduce Spoto's complex thesis to the space of a tiny nutshell. In this context, the brutally explicit murder-rape in the late film "Frenzy" is not simply to be seen as a reflection of Hollywood's relaxing standards, but also as a break-through in Hitchcock's psyche to attitudes he had hitherto sublimated in his art. It is not a heroic portrait of Al-fred Hitchcock that Donald Spoto has presented here. It is instead the to challenge Spoto's conclusion that Hitchcock was a "great artist" on the order of Hieronymus Bosch, who, like Hitchcock, was held to be a competent worker in his time, but was ultimately recognized as speak-ing "out of the sadness of his age and the experience of massive evil."

But this much is certain. Spoto makes us see that Hitchcock was pressed those elusive images and half-remembered dreams in terms that moved and astounded and dehighted and aroused awe from millions round the world." With such

NFL Sets College Draft April 26

RANCHO MIRAGE, California (Combined Dispatches) - National Football League team owners reaffirmed Thursday that they will not draft college underclassmen and announced that all 12 rounds of the 1983 draft will be conducted April 26.

"We reaffirmed the college draft eligibility rule," said Commissioner Pete Rozelle. "Other than legislation outlawing it ... we're going to contimue as we have in the past, and only players eligible by our normal standards will be drafted this April."

Cuevas, stopped in four rounds by Roberto Duran in his last fight on Jan. 29, said he made the decision after "consultations with my parents, my wife and my manager." A native of Mexico, Cuevas gained the WBA crown in 1975; he made

ART BUCHWALD Don't Lie to Me

WASHINGTON — The president has issued an executive order requiring every federal employee with a security clearance to sign a non-disclosure pledge and submit to lie detector tests if asked. Mr. Reagan's given reason was to prevent leaks of classified information. His real reason was to stop leaks that make his administration look incompetent or bad. Will this stop leaking in Washington? "Not on your life," said Stanley

Pincher, chief coordinator of Leaks for High Government Officials. But the government will now have much better control over what is leaked to the press and what is withheld because it would give us a black eve."

"What constitutes a good leak?" "Top secret information about the nuclear superiority of the Soviet Union. We want that leaked out as fast as possible, especially while Congress is debating the defense

"What, in your opinion, is a bad

"Top secret information of sweetheart deals with U.S. defense contractors on weapons now in production that don't work and cost three times as much as we said they would."

"I can see why you wouldn't want that kind of information leaked," I said. "The lie detector will be a great help in stopping whistleblowers from ratting on the administration."

"It may not stop all unofficial leaks but it will certainly have a chilling effect on anyone who leaks to cover up wrongdoings."

"How does your department op-

"We have a National Council of Office Leakers, which meets every Monday morning. It is composed of senior officials from all the departments and agencies, and is chaired by a very high White House source. Each official presents the leaks he would like to pass on to the media that week. If, for example, the Gross National Product is going up, Commerce will ask to leak it, and if unemployment is going down we'll let Labor

"This is all nuts and bolts stuff. The big leaks, to have any credibility, have to come directly from the White House."

"Would you give me an exam-

"Well suppose it's decided that Secretary of the Interior James Watt will have to go because of the EPA scandal. I'm not saying we have decided it yet - but we can't rule out that he is becoming a political liability. A White House aide will tell a reporter: 'This is off the record, but the president has no intention of firing Jim Watt.'

"The very fact that the White House aide denied it without being asked immediately alerts the reporter that something is in the wind. He reports it and the rest of the media pick it up. When Watt reads about it he calls the president and asks him if he wants him to resign. The president says of course not. Watt can have his job as long as he wants. This private conversation is also leaked to the press, and pretty soon the only question is not will Watt resign but when."

"It's the old 'leak by denial' trick," I said. "They've used it on me a hundred times."

"It never fails. The trick of leaking when it comes to firing somebody in the administration is not to push him out the window, but make him jump of his own free

"What about unauthorized leaks? Is that where the lie detector comes

"That's correct. As soon as we read a leak that we didn't okay, we send F. Lee Bailey and his technicians over to the department to take the tests. Anyone who refuses to have the electrodes attached to his chest will automatically be dismissed. If he takes the test and Bailey decides he's lying, the leaker is pushed out the window."

"But isn't it true that lie detectors are very unreliable and can't even be admitted in court as evi-

"The president was aware of it and the lie detector was not his first choice. He preferred to have an employee swear on the Bible he wasn't a leaker. But to his chagrin he discovered this was unconstitu-

Makarova, From Ballet to Broadway

By Leslie Bennetts New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Clad in a scanty pink silk negligee, she lounges on a satin-pillowed bed, her face obscured by the raised newspaper she is reading. Slowly, one sculptured leg rises in the air, points elegantly skyward and descends with mesmerizing deliberateness. Then the other leg begins to rise.

It is the audience's first glimpse of Natalia Makarova in On Your Toes," and it evokes a ripple of laughter; a more fitting introduction for a hallerina making her Broadway debut would be hard to find.

So would a more appropriate part. In the current revival of the 1936 Rodgers and Hart collaboration with George Balanchine which, like the original, is directed by George Abbott — Makaro-va plays a Russian ballerina who adapts enthusiastically to a jazz ballet, "Slaughter on 10th Ave-

In her first speaking part, Ma-karova, 42, seems equally delighted with her own new role as a Broadway star.

"I've never really used my voice for anything," noted Ma-karova in a thick Russian accent. "My English is problem; it is not so clear. The Russian vocal language is mostly here" — she tapped her throat — "but English is more down. I tried to learn how to use my diaphragm to speak more from here" pointed chestward — "rather than strain my vocal cords."

The physical strains of the role have been exacerbated by the injuries Makarova suffered last December, when a pipe fell on her during her performance at the show's tryout at Kennedy Center in Washington. She is still undergoing therapy for a broken shoul-der blade. "It doesn't bother me when I'm dancing, but after a performance, it's difficult for me even to do this," she said, lifting a glass of water. Her arm sagged. "At end of day, it gets very heavy," added the ballering, who plays seven shows a week.

Critics have remarked upon Makarova's flair for comedy in the role of Vera Baronova, who is dramatic, egotistical and self-involved, despite a grand passion for a faithless dancing partner. "Anyone who can laugh at yourself have comedian possibility," Makarova said. "I do not take seriously myself. I can laugh at myself all the time. I didn't have much opportunity in ballet; all my roles are dramatic, mostly tragic. It's the same satisfaction here — even more, because it's so positive. When the public laughs, feel happy. I really feel excited. More laugh, more you get in high spirit. It's like a drug - it make you high."

But she credits much of her success to her director, the 95year-old Abbott. "He worked with me very hard," she said.

A principal dancer with Ameri-can Ballet Theater, Makarova has been affiliated with the company since 1970, when she defected from the Soviet Union after 11 years with the Kirov Ballet. She continues to dance with ABT, and will leave "On Your Toes" for a week in May to do two per-formances of "La Bayadère." Her commitment to "On Your Toes" runs through June 12, after which she will return to other dancing engagements.

Her professional achievements notwithstanding, it is her son whom Makarova views as her "most joyful accomplishment." "He is my best performance in

ion. "It's one of my most right decisions in life. I wasn't happy. It's very predictable there. That's why I left; I exactly knew what would happen to me there. There wasn't any mystery. My destiny is not very ordinary. Part of my life is one world, the second part in another world. Just like now — I have two lives. When I start to remember Russia, it's like another life." Makarova maintained that she was not yet worried about how long she could continue to dance.

"It's very individual," she said, "depending on physique, health, ability, how your body looks, many things. Actually, now it's easier for me to dance than ever before. I guess that's experience. When I started my career, I didn't have any stamina. I just remember this feeling of exhaustion. It was enormous effort to go through a performance. When I arrived in the West, it was terrifying — the tempo, the speed, the life. I couldn't dream I could dance every day - but I did. In children, because they didn't want to take time out of career. Russia we have everything slower, we never never dance every night. Maybe three times a month perform there - here, three times a week. But you get used to it, and once you're used to it, it gives you more energy."
